

ABSTRACT

In wireless communications, transmission devices require continuous supplies of random data for encryption processes. The invention provides a method for generating a continuous pool of truly random data with hardware

5 that is already available in conventional CDMA phones.

1. A method for generating a continuous pool of truly random data with hardware that is already available in conventional CDMA phones, comprising the steps of: